When God forgets to send the dawn
and birds no longer wing.
Our own beloved warriors brave
we'll cease remembering.

Amy Ratz, 1943 - from The Weese Scrapbook

This list is based on the information gathered by W.S. Herrington and Rev. A.J. Wilson in 1920 and 1921 from returning veterans, their families and friends. Some of this information was subsequently published by the Lennox and Addington Historical Society as The War Work of the County of Lennox and Addington (1922). However, the information you will find here is not always the same as you will find in the book. For consistency, some entries are abbreviated here, while others have been enhanced by information available now which was not available then. Also, this list includes some names submitted by local residents who were rejected for War Work as not having long-term connection with Lennox and Addington. We have chosen to include them.

Researchers are encouraged to refer to the Attestation Papers on the National Library and Archives of Canada website for more information. You will find the serial numbers helpful in using this source.

Cousins, T. R.:
Appears on Wilson's list. No one of that name found.

Cousins, Thomas William:
Born Hampshire, England. Came to Canada as a boy. Before the war, was working as a farm labourer and living with the Roland Hawley family in Richmond township, near Napanee, where he attended school. Enlisted April, 1916, when just shy of eighteen in the 146th Battalion. He was part of the second draft of the 146th used to shore up the ranks of the ill-fated 4th Canadian Mounted Rifles, and arrived in France in November of 1916. "We went into the trenches about the last of December," Cousins recalled, "and stayed for eighteen days. When we first went in it was quite nice and dry, but on the second day in it rained all day and by night the trenches stood from about two to three feet in mud and water. We were then issued gum boots to keep our feet and legs dry, but seeing that we had to be in it for so long at a time, they were not much good." After being in the support lines for a few days, they were moved to the front line, and Pte. Cousins was assigned to a listening post. "The duty of the man is to warn as quickly as possible the comrades in the front line, and then to look after himself," said Cousins. He was also sent out on work parties. "The weather was foul... most of the time it was raining. To make matters worse, Fritz had a nasty habit of strafing us." When eventually relieved, the men were filthy. Many had not had a chance to shave or wash for days and were plastered with mud.

After a brief rest, the men were sent back behind the lines to practice going over the top in preparation for a big offensive on Easter Sunday. Sunday came, and they were told the event was postponed for 24 hours. Monday dawned with the "lads as eager to go over as if they were going to a picnic at home". Thus began Cousin's part in the battle for Vimy Ridge. "I was a bomber," he wrote. "I carried 120 rounds ball ammunition and 50 rounds blank ammunition (the latter used for firing off rifle grenades). I also carried 14 mills bombs, 2 flares and 4 sandbags. I had also with me my rifle and bayonet, and a rifle grenade cup and 48 hours iron rations. As you see, we did not have much to carry, so what do they do but stick a shovel or pick onto each of us to "dig in" if we reached our objective. At 4:30, we left our support trench and went up to the front line. Meanwhile, our guns of every calibre were pounding the lines of the Fritzs all to bits. At 5:30, the order came along the trench to fix bayonets. We fixed our bayonets, and all the time we were joking amongst each other as to what we were going to send each other when we got back to 'Blighty'. Sometimes, there were one or two of the lads who spoke about home, and then we became a little serious. Of course, we were a little downhearted but when we come to look back at it, it does not seem so bad after all. Well, at 5:25, our guns ceased, and the order came along, 'Get ready!' Every man looked to his rifle and bombs and awaited the order to move. Suddenly, a few seconds after 5:25, our guns let loose. When they did, you could not hear a single word that your chum said, even if he were only a few feet away. At 5:30 we moved out of our lines and made a dash for Fritz's front line. We had about 200 yards to cover, but we had his first line in two minutes. As for myself, after climbing out of the trench, I was forced to go through our own wire. I got safely through it and had got about ten yards the other side of it when a whizz bang came along and exploded right behind me. The concussion knocked me off my feet and I received seven pieces of shapnel in my legs, but after getting to my feet again, I did not feel any great pain, so I went on. I got between his third and fourth lines, when I ran across my platoon stretcher-bearer. He asked me if I was wounded. I said I had got a scratch or two. He looked at my legs and bandaged them up, and then told me to beat it out. I got down to the dressing station and was looked after, and next morning I was in Bolonge. ... After four weeks in convalescence, I was sent to Shorncliffe, and there I ran across some of the lads who came out of the April 9th scrap. I learned that Pte. McTaggart and W.A. Dafoe, and also Ptes. Asselstine and C. McCabe had been killed, and numerous of our lads wounded... We are all deeply affected at the deaths of the lads who have fought by our sides for months but we all knew that some had to be taken, and life in Flanders makes a man so hard that event the death of a brother sometimes does not make him angry.” Private T.W. Cousins, writing from Shorncliffe, July, 1917. #835848

Was in France and Belgium and participated in the Battle of Vimy Ridge, Hill 70 and Passchendaele. After Vimy, he wrote: "I am in the trenches writing using my mess tin for a desk, but hope you will be able to make this scribbling out. Well, I am going to tell you a little about my house here. There is a slight hole dug into the ground with some pieces of boards, poles and scantling over it, and then some dirt put of the top of them, so that Fritz cannot discover it very well, and one side of it covered up with a few boards, a sand bag and an old overcoat hanging over it to break the wind. (The other side of the place is wide open.) Of course, this 'house' is not waterproof by any means, but good luck, we have only had part of one day wet since we came into the trenches this time." He continued, "I spent my birthday in the trenches and it was certainly a lovely day, just delightful. I thought of you all at home more than once and wondered if Dad were fishing.. I suppose you had a lovely time at camp meeting. I heard about it all. Isn't it funny how news travels?" Huffman was later promoted to the rank of Corporal.
